

Database Management System - CSE 221 - Normalization

Normalization is the process of organizing data in a database.

It involves creating tables and establishing relationships according to rules.

First normal form eliminates repeating groups in individual tables.

Second normal form eliminates redundancy by separating data that depends on subset

Third normal form eliminates fields that do not depend on the primary key.